PENSIONS FOR OLD AGE. An English Plan to Aid Venerable Men and Women, (From the London Spectator.)

We must end as we began, by suggesting that if the government have come to the conclusion that they are bound to do someconclusion that they are bound to do some-thing in regard to the question of old-agr pensions, what they ought to do is to begin by a limited and safe scheme, and then, if it is found convenient, to expand and in-crease it. We have no wish to press our own plan unduly, but we may use it as an illustration of what we mean when we ad-vocate a limited scheme which shall be ca-pable. If it works well, of an increased ap-plication. Let the government propose to pable, if it works well, of an increased application. Let the government propose to grant to all persons over seventy-five 5s. a week provided that they have not been it a workhouse except for medical relief—this proposal is to pravent the claiming of pensions by tramps and members of the true pauper class—and provided, also, that they are not income-tax payers or occupiers of a house paying inhabited-house duty. Let them make the postoffice, working under the guardiane, the machinety for distributing the pensions, but let the cost be equally divided between the central government and the local authority.

Under such a scheme the cost to the local authorities would not be likely to be mo e than the expenditure incurred now to support persons over seventy-five, while the the local authority. port persons over seventy-five, while the cost to the imperial government would not probably be more than, say, a million and a half or two million a year—a sum which could be raised without producing a revolution in our fiscal system. If, after trial, it was found that the burden was not excessive nothing would be easier than to gradually reduce the age at which pensions were due until sixty-five became the fixed age. As we have urged several times before, one of the great advantages of a scheme beginning at seventy-five is the help accorded to the benefit societies. They dure grant very good rates for is, a week belp accorded to the benefit societies. They dare grant very good rates for is, a week old-age pensions beginning at sixty-five if they know that every pensioner will, for their purpose, die at seventy-five or before. We shall be told, of course, that the "Spectator" scheme has one fault which is fast, except, that it would not case the fatal—namely, that it would not ease the pressure where the shor really pinches, and that relief at seventy-five is practically no relief at all. This we entirely deny. Of course, it is not such good relief as a pen-sion at sixty-five, but it would, we believe, be received with great satisfaction. and aion at sixty-five, but it would, we believe, he received with great satisfaction, and could, as we have said, always be expanded. It is not a leap in the dark, but a step which, if it prove in the right direction, can be easily followed. If instead it prove a blunder, retreat is possible; and even if there were no drawing back, comparatively little harm would be done. For these rea-sons we implore the government to begin by a scheme which makes seventy-five the fixed are, and so limits the liability. If fixed age, and so limits the liability. I they insist upon the committee's scheme and rush suddenly into a vast and complicated plan, we foresee endless difficulties and perplexities—difficulties and perplexi-ties which must ultimately ruin not only the government, but our present safe and vigorous system of finance.
